Updates in Implant Dentistry for the Practicing Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeon

Dental implants are a known and predictable treatment option for missing teeth and most patients today desire this therapy. Although implant survival is extremely high, these favorable outcomes depend greatly on proper case selection, diagnosis and treatment planning, surgical and prosthetic execution and management of complications. In addition, patients are continuously demanding more complicated treatment modalities with immediate placement, immediate loading, using the most state-of-the-art materials and techniques. This presentation will update the practicing OMS on achieving the most ideal and successful implant outcomes, avoiding and managing complications, and utilizing new materials and technologies.

Learning Objectives:

- To Update the practicing clinician on medical risk factors and medications that may increase implant complications.
- Strategies to identify and prevent unfavorable outcomes in the implant patient.
- Case presentations demonstrating the integration of new techniques, technologies and materials.
- Management of the edentulous patient through grafting and graft-less methods.

NOTE: Eight hours of continuing education will be provided.
